Commentary

1. See the discussion in C. Higbie, The Lidian Chronicle and the Greek Creation of their Past (Oxford 2003), 79, 88, 198–99. Although the inscription is legible, the interpretation of the title of Aieluros' work is difficult. C. Blinkenberg, Lindos: Fouilles de L'Acropole 1902-1914: 2, Inscriptions (Berlin 1941), col. 164, wondered whether we should understand Exagiades, Hexagiades, or Six Agiades. U. von Wilamowitz-Moellendorff, 'Phaethon', in Hermes 18(1883), 396–432, suggested emending the text to Six Haliades, to refer to the story of the six Heliades who killed the seventh, Phaethon-Tenages. This seems suitable in the context of Rhodes.

Biographical Essay

Aieluros is cited only in this entry in the Lidian Chronicle for a votive of Heracles, although his work was attacked by Theotimos and the compilers of the Chronicle consulted it (see 470). Aieluros' name is unique; perhaps it is a pseudonym derived from an animal name ('cat').
